

WHO: Collyn Taylor, second- year journalism major

WHAT: Intern at the University of South Carolina Communications Department

WHERE: Columbia, South Carolina

After finishing up his freshman year of college and first year in the Scholastic Press Office, Taylor is excited to be able to continue writing, interviewing and meeting people over the summer for his internship.

For the upcoming school year, Taylor will continue working with scholastic journalists at both the high school and college level with the SchoPress office and as the Assistant Editor of "The Daily Gamecock." Not only is he looking to better himself in his major next year, but also in his basketball game.

In terms of what students should do over the summer, Taylor likes to keep it simple.

"Continue doing what you enjoy doing," said Taylor in an email interview. "If you enjoy writing--write. If you enjoy playing basketball--play. Continue to work at the thing you love to do.

Also, take some time for you. Be lazy and watch TV all day (been there, done that). Make sure you relax just as much as you work. But most importantly, work on what you love."
